

WENDY STANFORD

"I have always loved art and when travelling visit as many galleries as I can. I loved drawing and painting at school but like many after getting an O level I went on to study more "serious" subjects at higher levels. I eventually ended up teaching Science, mainly Biology, which did call on accurate drawings and diagrams.

It wasn't until I retired that I decided to take up art as a pastime. As soon as I started I realised what I had been missing. I find it totally absorbing. I have had so much enjoyment from meeting and learning from other artists, and trying different techniques and mediums.

I still enjoy travelling and take many photographs that I would love to paint. I am an amateur artist and enjoy watercolour, acrylic and recently oils. I am still learning and get so much satisfaction when I produce something I like. I am also very happy if other people get some pleasure from my work."
